ABOUT THE LYRICS (from Mo)

Lost

"Lost" is about the phenomenon of self-promotion and the desire to hide behind it, a critical attitude towards self-promotion and the quest for fame and recognition in society, which pushes us into a kind of puppet role where you no longer make your own decisions. Every time you step out of your comfort zone, you lose your home and feel lost. The temptation to present yourself, to put on the mask, becomes greater and greater until you are finally in a kind of puppet role in which you lose yourself. But at some point you realize that the game has no meaning and you try to escape. But it doesn't work without pain, and you are trapped in your circle. It's time to act and return home. The song expresses the feeling of despair and lostness that comes when you stop being true to yourself and instead give in to the pursuit of approval. It is a call to remain true to oneself and not to lose one's identity, not to hide behind a facade. After all, isn't it our individuality that makes us so special? And who knows what is right or wrong?

I can't sleep

As the title suggests, this is about insomnia and the thoughts and feelings that come with it. When you are in a situation in your life where you have to make important decisions. Problems and thoughts that torment you and that circle in your head, do not let you rest. In the lyrics "I think I can not sleep because.... thoughts are spinning in my head" and "I think I can not sleep because... decisions are to be made" I mean this restlessness and tension that do not let you sleep. The refrain "colors, moments, new, old, dammed up thing to do, I can not sleep and then... you" supports this mood and gives a feeling of overwhelming and confusion. My thoughts are all about one person who is in his head. I wonder what I mean to this person and what impact my behavior has on our relationship or on that one special person. Why this person is haunting my mind in the first place. How I feel about them. However, I ultimately find peace in my dreams because that is where I can speak to my heart, my soul finds peace. By talking it out, talking to myself, singing my thoughts and feelings, I finally manage to fall asleep.

The Devil in the Neck

I wrote "The Devil in the Neck" because I was frustrated with people who pretended to help needy and disadvantaged communities, but in reality only pursued the interest of their own community. I was outraged at their arrogance and disinterest in other people who did not want to be part of their own community. These thoughts and feelings arose from my observation and experience with such people. I wanted to express my opinion on this issue in the form of a song and convey the message that it is important to understand and respect others, regardless of their background and beliefs. What real charity means to me. As I was writing the lines, I was thinking about the people who call their actions good, but in reality do not see the consequences of their actions and pressure others in order to influence them. I also wanted to point out that it is important to question ourselves and see the motivation behind our actions to make sure we are really doing the good we are advocating.
